Independent Research Firm Names HCL Technologies a Leader Among Global Product Engineering Testing Services

HCL Achieves One of the Highest Distinctions in the Leaders Quadrant

SUNNYVALE, CA/Noida, Sept 28, 2010 – HCL Technologies, one of the leading global IT services providers, today announced that the company was named a leader in the September 2010 report, IDC MarketScape Global Discrete and Embedded Product Engineering Testing Services Vendor Assessment. HCL was among a group of thirteen vendors that IDC evaluated based on current offerings, strategy and market presence. In addition, HCL was named a major player in the Enterprise Application Testing Services vendor assessment.

“With extensive domain-specific testing tools, automation frameworks and product life cycle expertise, HCL’s ERS team has extensive capabilities ranging across the telecom, semiconductor, aerospace, medical, and ISV domains,” commented Rona Shuchat, Program Director for AO Services, IDC. “HCL has the opportunity to bridge enterprise applications and the engineering space.”

According to the IDC report, “from a product engineering angle, HCL is viewed as a leader, with opportunities to cross-pollinate these skills and domain knowledge.” In addition, the report states that, “its (HCL’s) software and hardware verification and validation services are applied to testing integrated products in consumer electronics, medical devices, telecom OEM products, aeronautics, and automotive.”¹

“We are proud of achieving one of the highest overall positions in the leader’s quadrant for embedded products engineering testing,” said G.H. Rao, Corporate Vice President and Head. “HCL is the first Indian company, and one of the few global corporations, to invest in Test & Certification CoE across several verticals. This is a testament to our strategy as a value creator in the space.”
